

Max Levoshin

Co-founder and CEO of Tatako and General Partner at Fanaura

Bio

Over two years Max traveled through 150 countries, studying how adults talk with children and raise them. He sorted the standards into categories, saw the same patterns repeat and built the best practices into a system, then turned to cognitive processes and psychology. Tatako grew out of that work.

Facts about Max

Investor in	Tatako, Fanaura, Axelion, Murblz, Crealution.
Exits	Denimax, a licensed telecom operator, 2011. Ritm-Z, a fulfillment company, 2013.
Experience	18 years in technology.
Education	Trained in computer science.
Writes about	AI and the future, on levoshin.com.
Speaks	English, Spanish, Russian, Portuguese.

A venture fund lives ten years. The ability to talk with other people serves a person for life. I don't know another investment with that horizon.

Machines translate words, and they keep getting better at it. Trust, a joke, a deal and a friendship still begin where two people speak directly.

Attribute to Max Levoshin, co-founder and CEO of Tatako.

Topics for interviews

- Why first words matter.
- What families in different countries have in common.
- Raising children with more than one language.
- Building a product for small children and their families.
- What machines will translate, and what stays between people.
- Early-stage investing in AI-native companies.
- From investor to full-time CEO: putting your own money and time into a company.